Fishing catches controversy at Hastings Park

PNE. Fears arise over habitat for birds along shoreline

For years, the only way to fish at the PNE was to play a carnival game.

Now anglers can cast a line at the man-made pond in the Sanctuary at Hastings Park, freshly stocked with 900 rainbow trout by the PNE and the Freshwater Fisheries Society of B.C.

But the move has prompted angry chirps from those who want to protect the bird-nesting habitat along the shoreline that's home to about 130 species — especially since fishing lessons began the same week the park board and city council passed motions to protect birds.

"While they were speaking of the necessity to protect bird habitats, they went ahead and let the PNE destroy habitats," said Sherry Breshears, a Hastings Community Association board member.

People are only supposed to fish from the new dock, measuring about 10 metres, but locals have had to pick up fishing line and hooks from trees surrounding the pond, Breshears said.

"There are people trampling over bushes making trails to the shoreline. They're fishing all around the pond," she said.

There are concerns there will be a "significant loss" of breeding birds and breeding habitats at the location, said George Clulow, president of the B.C. Field Ornithologists.

Breshears and the Hastings Park Conservancy also argue there wasn't adequate consultation with the community or environmentalists before the fish were introduced. They said the PNE simply "does what it wants" without consultation, and they want the park board to take over governance of the park (a governance change is in the works).

But the PNE took the community concerns about birds into account before introducing the fish, said Dave Hutch, the city's project manager for the Hastings Park and PNE plan. They listened to the community last fall, and that's why people are only allowed to fish from the dock, Hutch said.

There have been "a couple hiccups" as people learn the rules, he said, but the city is "on top" of monitoring the park. It's also working to improve signage. EMILY JACKSON/METRO

Second Pidgin protester arrested, facing charges

Vancouver police are recommending charges against a protester in connection to demonstrations outside the Downtown Eastside's Pidgin restaurant.

According to the VPD, the protester was arrested at home Monday morning and is facing charges of assault, theft under $5,000 and mischief.

Police will not release the protester's identity until Crown counsel has approved the charges.

This is the second arrest in the ongoing protests of the restaurant, which has become a lightning rod for anti-gentrification activists.

Another protester, 25-year-old Robyn Pickell, was arrested last month for allegedly trying to lock the doors of the restaurant with a chain while people were still inside.

Camping mishap

Man appealing $860K fine for starting wildfire

A Cariboo-area man who was fined more than $860,000 for starting a wildfire while camping on his own property is appealing the penalty.

Documents filed with the provincial Forest Appeals Commission say Robert Unger lit a campfire on land he owned when it was unsafe to do so.

In May 2011, the manager of the Cariboo Fire Centre issued a decision ordering Unger to pay the costs of fighting the fire. Unger asked for a review, and the same fire centre manager determined — again — that he should pay.

Unger's appeal to the commission is scheduled to be heard later this month.

Captain trial: Owner says dog he killed was cherished companion

Warning: Graphic content. Judge withholds sentencing for Vancouver man who admitted to beating his dog with a baseball bat

vancouver@metronews.ca

Captain, a two-year-old German shepherd, was found in this Kitsilano dumpster last July. The dog, which had been beaten with an aluminum baseball bat, died of a heart attack less than 24 hours after he was rescued from the dumpster. His owner, Brian Whitlock, has pleaded guilty to Captain's death. METRO FILE

Details of a Vancouver man beating his German shepherd with a bat and tossing it into a Kitsilano dumpster were heard in court Tuesday as members of the public openly wept as the events were heard.

Brian Whitlock, 26, has admitted to tossing down a piece of chicken and smashing his two-year-old German shepherd named Captain — a dog he described as "the best dog he ever had" — in the head with an aluminum baseball bat, then wrapping it up in white bed sheets and tossing the dog into a dumpster, leaving it for dead in a pool of its own blood and feces.

Whitlock says the dog was "poisoned or cursed" after eating an unknown substance during a walk on July 17, 2012, a day before he beat the dog and wanted to euthanize his pet as "humanely and quickly as possible."

Puncture wounds were also found around Captain's body, mainly the neck, but there is no evidence Whitlock took a knife to the dog.

After he believed the dog was dead, he used his white bed sheets so Captain wouldn't be wrapped up like garbage, defence council stated.

Police confiscated an aluminum baseball bat with fur and blood identified as Captain's from Whitlock's apartment. Officers also seized two Swiss Army knives, a heavy chain, a wooden walking stick and a pair of scissors. There was no DNA evidence linking those items to the attack.

Whitlock's apartment was described as having dents smashed into the walls, and an unidentified blood splatter on one wall and canine feces scattered around.

Defence lawyers Tony Paisana and Jeff Campbell argued Whitlock suffers from a mental illness, possibly paranoid schizophrenia.

A man lights candles at a vigil for Captain on Sunday. METRO FILE

There were two contradictory psychiatric reports on Whitlock in April and May 2013, with one stating there was no mental illness at the time, and the other stating he may have suffered from paranoid schizophrenia.

Defence counsel has asked for Whitlock to be released on time served with three years probation and counselling, in addition to a 10-year ban on owning animals.

Crown counsel has asked for Judge David St. Pierre to sentence Whitlock to four to six months in jail, minus 45 days time served, with a lifetime ban on owning animals.

St. Pierre withheld sentencing until at least next week to allow for proper time to mull the evidence before making a judgment.

Alleged love-drug pushers looking at hard time

People who allegedly trafficked industrial quantities of illegal erectile-dysfunction pills into Canada are facing the prospect of jail time.

Two men are accused of bringing in hundreds of thousands of contraband pills made in China and selling them across Canada.

Cops bust underground pot crop

Langley. Disguised grow-op containing 430 plants, industrial generator linked to Hells Angels, police say

Industrious crime

"The lengths that the people constructing these types of grow-ops will go to are alarming."

CFSEU-BC spokesman Sgt. Lindsey Houghton in a statement

EMILY JACKSON
emily.jackson@metronews.ca

A sophisticated underground marijuana grow-op disguised as a Langley hobby farm — complete with three sheep, a pig and guarded by about a dozen pit bulls and Chihuahuas — was busted by police over the weekend.

RCMP needed a crane to excavate five steel shipping containers connected with a continuous underground pathway at the property in the 27000 block of 56th Avenue, according to a news release from B.C.'s Combined Forces Special Enforcement Unit.

Three men and one woman were arrested when investigators found 430 plants at the site, though they were later released pending further investigation. The dogs are being cared for by one of their family members.

Officers were "shocked" that the operators cut into a nearby natural-gas pipeline to power the elaborate bunker system with an industrial-sized natural-gas generator worth about $100,000.

"This had the potential to be extremely dangerous to the public and emergency responders," CFSEU-BC spokesman Sgt. Lindsey Houghton said in a statement.

Police believe the grow-op, described as a "complex operation that required a great deal of planning and equipment," including cranes and flatbed trucks, was running for at least a couple of years.

This is the second underground grow-op the CFSEU-BC has dismantled in the past two months. While police don't believe the Langley operation is connected to the Mission operations disguised as horse paddocks they busted last month, they think both are linked to the Hells Angels.

Pace of debt accumulation slows

Average Canadian consumer debt, excluding mortgages, fell by two per cent in the first quarter of 2013 compared with the fourth quarter of 2012. THE CANADIAN PRESS FILE

Personal finance. Data shows largest quarterly drop in non-mortgage debt since 2004

New data on consumer credit suggests Canadians are becoming more cautious about making purchases that involve taking on debt.

The analysis by TransUnion Market Trends shows average consumer debt in Canada, excluding mortgages, fell by two per cent to $26,935 in the first three months of 2013 from the fourth quarter in 2012.

While total debt is still 3.5 per cent higher from a year ago, it was the first quarterly drop since the third quarter of 2011 and the largest since the firm began collecting the data in 2004.

TransUnion vice-president Thomas Higgins says while the fall-off was significant, it is still too early to declare a trend. He notes that the 2011 decline was quickly followed by rapid increases in 2012.

The Bank of Canada has welcomed the general trend to more frugal finances among households, particularly in mortgages, which make up for the vast majority of debt held by Canadians.

Would you dig through a landfill for this game?

A New Mexico city commission has agreed to allow a Canadian studio to search an old landfill where old, terrible Atari games are rumoured to be buried. The Alamogordo Daily News reports that Alamogordo, N.M., commissioners will allow Fuel Industries, which has offices in Ottawa and Los Angeles, to search the landfill for games. One sought-after game, the E.T. video game, is thought by some gamers to be one of the worst video games of all time. Atari paid Steven Spielberg tens of millions of dollars to license the E.T. name, and the dud of a game caused the troubled company's worth to sink even further at the time. Alamogordo Commissioner Jason Baldwin says he played the E.T. game and it was horrible. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENY MILK FOR GREENER PASTURES

JUST SAYIN'

Paul Sullivan
metronews.ca

I'm so confused.

This week's hot book says that if you really want a meaningful relationship, you should go on a sex diet.

Well, to be precise, it says women should go on a sex diet, but that has obvious implications for their potential partners, who are everybody else.

The book is called The 30-Day Love Detox: Cleanse Yourself of Bad Boys, Cheaters, and Men Who Won't Commit — And Find a Real Relationship.

The author is Dr. Wendy Walsh, one of those friendly experts who populate the cable news channels. She even plays cable news experts on movies like Baywatch and The Cable Guy. I'm not sure how she went from a Ryerson journalism grad to "doctor," but it happened somewhere between Halifax, where she was born, and Los Angeles, where she was reborn on Fox and CNN.

She does appear to have a PhD in psychology from the California Graduate Institute, which is not based on the back of a pack of matches, so we should listen.

The diet analogy goes beyond the title. It's all about "slow love." Like "slow food," get it? Citing "evolutionary psychology," Dr. Blond Alliteration promises to help women:

- Purge junk-food men
- Learn the five sexual myths that keep women single
- Determine when to begin the onset of sexual activity in a new relationship
- Avoid the biggest mistakes women make when dating online
- Spot a commitment-oriented man at his "state of readiness," which is not, apparently, what you think it is.

The secret: No sex for the first 30 days. As far as I can tell, she'd really like you to abstain until he puts a ring on it, but that's way too long for today's post-Sex and the City woman.

Dr. BA also says women should stop sexting during this same period of abstinence. It's the sexual equivalent of empty calories.

But! But! you're probably asking yourself: "How is this any different from the advice that mom used to dole out on a daily basis?" And, truth be known, still does. Well, it's scientific. During orgasm, the female body unleashes a tide of oxytocin, a hormone that encourages bonding. This is dangerous, according to Dr. Walsh, as a woman can think she's just hooking up when she's really bonding with some unsuitable, commitment-phobic, bad-boy creep who is just using her for sex.

So it's like mom (or dad, who knows all about commitment-phobic bad boys because he probably used to be one) with a PhD. Just goes to show the value of a good education. The moral of this story is that morality has nothing to do with it, but it's still the same old story: "Why would he buy the milk if he can get the, er, cow for free?"

Slow love rules. Even in the 21st century.

Foal finds comfort with teddy bear

An orphaned week-old foal sleeps soundly in the lap of his new surrogate mum — a teddy bear. Breeze, the bay pony, was found abandoned in Dartmoor National Park in Devon, southwest England, just a few hours after his birth.

After finding the newborn, rescuers from the local Mare and Foal Sanctuary took him in. Breeze had been stumbling hopelessly around the park's hillside and attempting to suckle on other mares. When he was found by rescuers after first being discovered by a local farmer, he was suffering from clinical shock and dehydration, said staff. METRO

Paid to be unemployed: when actors get naked

The Internship. Owen Wilson and Vince Vaughn use a familiar formula with their latest bumbling, stumbling comedy

IN FOCUS
Richard Crouse
scene@metronews.ca

Owen Wilson, left, and Vince Vaughn star in The Internship, which opens this weekend. HANDOUT

The new buddy comedy The Internship pairs Owen Wilson and Vince Vaughn for the first time since 2005's Wedding Crashers.

They are still wild and crazy guys, but this time out they are unemployed wild and crazy guys pushed out of their jobs by technology.

Unable to get a foothold in the new media field they take intern jobs at Google.

"We're looking at some sort of mental Hunger Games against a bunch of genius kids for just a handful of jobs," says Wilson.

Many movies have used unemployment as the starting point for storytelling.

In Lost in America, rated one of Bravo's 100 Funniest Movies, Albert Brooks plays a successful advertising executive who gets fired for insulting his boss.

Free from the shackles of employment he goes all carpe diem and convinces his wife Linda (Julie Hagerty) to leave her job and explore the country in a Winnebago. When they lose their nest egg on a Las Vegas stop over they reenter the work force as a crossing guard and manager at a Der Wienerschnitzel restaurant, respectively.

As the movie ends they hit the road once again, hoping to reclaim their old jobs and lifestyles.

It would be hard to imagine a more toxic workplace than the real estate office in Glengarry Glen Ross.

Encouragement comes in the form of verbal abuse — most of which can't be printed in a family newspaper — and a motivational sales contest offering three prizes.

The top seller wins a Cadillac Eldorado.

"Second prize is a set of steak knives," says Blake (Alec Baldwin). "Third prize is you're fired."

Playwright David Mamet based the original play on his experiences working in a real estate office in the 1970s.

Finally, The Full Monty is a comedy that takes a serious look at the effects of unemployment on the individual and the community.

Set in Sheffield, England, it's the story of six men, most unemployed steel workers, who come up with a unique way to pay the bills.

They decide to form a Chippendale dancer style group, separating themselves from the pack by going "the full monty" and go completely stark naked.

While filming, the actors agreed to go completely nude in front of 400 extras provided they only had to do it once.

They got it in one take, and according to Roger Ebert, the inspiring and revealing final scene "was applauded at the screening I attended."

Get hungry

Radcliffe really wants to be a rad dad

Daniel Radcliffe wants to start a family, and he may be in somewhat of a hurry about it.

"I'd like to get started on it before my 30s," the 23-year-old Harry Potter star tells Time Out London.

"I like the idea of being a youngish parent so I've got energy to play football, even though they'll be better than me by the time they're four."

And while he doesn't currently have a mom-to-be in mind, the height challenged Radcliffe admits she'll have to do a lot of the heaving lifting, in terms of height-wise.

"I will have to find a very tall wife if they're going to be good at sports," he says. "You could be my size as a boxer, you'd just have to be a super featherweight or something."

Hats off to Panama!

Country of contrasts. This little nation with a famous canal boasts a bustling city, pristine beaches and verdant countryside

life@metronews.ca

From modern skyscrapers in Panama City to the wild countryside and pristine beaches, Panama is a country of contrasts.

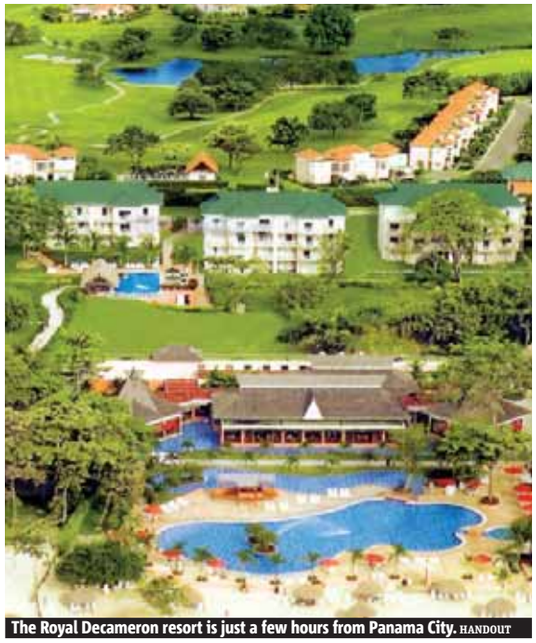
The Panama Canal, of course, brings people from all over the world to the capital, where international cuisine is easily found along with Caribbean flavours in restaurants such as Manolo Caracol and La Vitrola.

Its imposing skyline, dotted with ultra-modern architecture, is on display through the windows of downtown hotels like the Radisson Decapolis or the rooftop of the Hard Rock Hotel Panama Megapolis.

The nightlife includes a variety of charming restaurants in the Casco Viejo (old city) and salsa clubs featuring live bands such as the Havana Club Panama.

The local currency? They use U.S. dollars, except for the coinage, which is called the Balboa and minted in Canada.

A short drive away lies a different world in the tropical forest. Day tours for zip lining, culture and craft, or a visit to the Embera Indigenous Community range from $55 to $90.



The Royal Decameron resort is just a few hours from Panama City. HANDOUT

For rest and relaxation in the sun, Panama has beaches on both the Pacific and Atlantic oceans.

Just a couple of hours from Panama City lies Farallon, home to the Royal Decameron Golf, Beach Resort and Villas Panama.

This all-inclusive resort is situated in a "dry arch," which means more sunny days on the beach.

Ten restaurants, a spa and various swimming pools make exploring this large resort fun for days. Nightly shows and a disco are a good way to cap a busy day.

Canadian influence

Canadian architect Frank Gehry — whose wife is Panamanian — designed the soon-to-be-finished Biomuseo, which showcases Panama's biodiversity. The distinct building, expected to become a cultural icon, is colourful to reflect its tropical environment.

Getting there

Nolitours offers flights through Air Transat to Panama City and various packaged vacations.

The world's greatest shortcut

It's impressive today and it must've blown people's minds 99 years ago when the first ship crossed the Panama Canal. Possibly the world's greatest shortcut — it takes ships an average of eight to 10 hours to transit the Canal versus nearly a month to go around South America — the Canal is also a must-see tourist attraction.

Its on-site museum has images and tools starting with the original French attempt at building the Canal, which was followed by the successful American completion of the crossing in 1914. Tens of thousands died during construction due to illnesses carried by mosquitoes and engineers were forced to innovate to dig through the continental divide.

Today, the Canal is one of the Seven Wonders of the Modern World and employs about 9,500 people, bringing in $1.5 billion to the Panamanian economy.

Although managed by the United States until 1999, the Canal is now nationally managed with an expansion on the way to handle larger ships. It's expected to be completed next year when the Canal turns 100. At the Miraflores lock, there's a buffet restaurant and viewing platform that allow tourists to see the ships enter the locks and watch them go through the various stages linking the ocean to Gatun Lake.

Mango Salsa Over Vermicelli: Sweet and savoury mash up

This recipe serves six as an appetizer or four as a main meal. MARK SHAPIRO, FROM ROSE REISMAN BRINGS HOME LIGHT PASTA (ROBERT ROSE)

for more, visit rosereisman.com or follow her on twitter @rosereisman

A fresh tasting summer pasta salad, this Mango Salsa Over Vermicelli is great for warm days. Add a grilled protein, such as fish or chicken, and you have a complete meal.

1. Cook pasta in boiling water according to package instructions or until firm to the bite. Rinse with cold water. Drain and set aside.

2. In bowl of food processor, combine mangoes, red peppers, onions, green peppers, oil, lemon juice, garlic and cilantro. Process on and off just until finely diced. Pour over pasta. ROSE REISMAN BRINGS HOME LIGHT PASTA (ROBERT ROSE) BY ROSE REISMAN

The how-tos of delivering an effective and engaging presentation at work

SHAHEERAH KAYANI
TalentEgg.ca

From time to time, we are all faced with the challenge of delivering an effective presentation or communicating with others effectively to get our message across at work.

To deliver an effective presentation, it is important to first understand the communication model and the three components of communication.

The communication model begins with the sender (you). The sender encodes the message, the message goes through your chosen channel (such as a PowerPoint presentation), and the receiver (your audience) will then decode your message and respond with their feedback. There are also three very key elements that are the makeup of effective communication: 10 per cent content, 35 per cent vocal qualities, and 55 per cent body language and facial expressions.

Now that you understand the communication process, here are some tips on delivering an effective presentation:

The amount of energy you demonstrate during your presentation will resonate with your audience, and keep them awake, listening and interested. And don't forget to smile. ISTOCK

Know your audience

It is very important to know your audience so that you can strategically relate your presentation topic and method of delivery to your audience. For example, if your audience is a panel of recruiters at a sales company (yes, an interview is probably one of your most important presentations!), you will need to dress professionally and present your work experiences and skills in a professional manner. But if your Early Childhood Education professor has given you the assignment of presenting to a group of preschoolers, then you will need to use age-appropriate terms and child-friendly activities. From my own personal experience as a business student, for example, Apple has been the most common presentation topic among my peers as we can all relate to the company and its products fairly easily.

Use visuals

Most of us are visual learners, and it can truly make your presentation so much better if you use visuals, such as images, diagrams, charts and videos, to support your presentation and message.

The classic presentation approach

Tell them what you are going to tell them, tell them, and tell them what you just told them. This is the classic presentation approach that will help keep your presentation smooth and organized. Begin with an agenda, then the body of your presentation content, and finish off with a summary and conclusion.

Meeting mantra

Tell them what you are going to tell them, tell them, and tell them what you just told them.

Walker vying to play safety for Lions

Matt Walker missed all but the first game of the regular season with the UBC Thunderbirds in 2012 due to a major knee injury — but the B.C. Lions drafted him anyway.

Now, the defensive back is looking to prove the Lions made a good decision as he contends for a job at the CFL club's training camp.

"(The injury) has been a good learning curve, and it's made me a better professional, I believe, because I know I can't control anything else," said Walker, 21. "I have to control myself. And, I controlled my rehab, and I worked hard at it — and I'm here today."

But to stick with the Lions, he will have to master an unfamiliar position quickly. The Vernon native is in contention for a job at safety as the Lions look to replace Cauchy Muamba, who bolted to the Winnipeg Blue Bombers as a free agent in the off-season.

"When you look at our needs and the potential for the conversion to happen for him, I look at him as a free safety," said Lions coach Mike Benevides. "When you look at his speed and when you look at his heart and skill set, how he plays with a physical edge, that's where he has the best opportunity to compete."

Walker is in line for a backup role to Muamba's anticipated replacement. J.R. LaRose has the starter's job for now, pending his performance in upcoming exhibition games.

'No real timeline'

Road to recovery. Whitecaps defender Jay DeMerit says the goal is to return this season from ruptured Achilles tendon

cam.tucker@metronews.ca

Jay DeMerit has entered the next phase of rehabilitation for a ruptured Achilles tendon, and the goal, he says, is to make it back to the pitch this season.

The Vancouver Whitecaps' veteran centre back ruptured his left Achilles tendon in the early minutes of the club's season-opener against Toronto FC on March 2.

He underwent surgery to repair the tendon, which the club stated was a successful operation.

The 33-year-old DeMerit was on the track at the Whitecaps' UBC practice facility Tuesday, doing some light jogging and other exercises, while his teammates got back to training following Saturday's 2-1 road win over the New York Red Bulls.

Quoted

"I think I'd be disappointed ... if I didn't play a part this season." Jay DeMerit, who has been sidelined since March 2

"Again, these things aren't a fast process," DeMerit told reporters.

"Now it's just about continuing down that road. There's no real timeline, it's just one step at a time, but so far the steps have been very progressive and we're looking to continue to do that."

DeMerit has been out of the cast for what he said was about a month and a half, and has been doing dryland training for about a week.

He had been previously using an underwater treadmill at the Fortius Athlete Development Centre in Burnaby.

DeMerit hasn't ruled out a comeback to the Whitecaps' lineup, although nothing is a guarantee at this point.

"The goal is to definitely play a part this season," he said.

"I think I'd be disappointed — and I think the medical staff would be disappointed — if I didn't play a part this season. That is the goal. But … these types of injuries aren't really a timeline issue. It's a month-at-a-time issue. So right now it's hopefully, what are we going to be doing by the end of next month and then go from there.

"The process of that; if all goes well, then I will play a part this season."

2014 Mitsubishi Mirage

ALL PHOTOS WHEELBASEMEDIA.COM

Review. Yet another global small car finds a home in North America

wheelbasemedia.com

It's lean times these days for Mitsubishi fans. With only a variety of Lancer and Outlander models plus the iMiEV electric car on showroom floors, product diversity is definitely lacking. Fortunately, some relief is at hand in the form of the 2014 Mirage sub-compact.

In the distant past, various Mirages were imported to North America wearing Mitsubishi, Dodge and Plymouth labels (Chrysler and Mitsubishi once worked closely together). That well dried up after the 2002 model year, but it will be at least partially replenished this fall by a small four-door hatchback that the automaker promises will be one of the most fuel-efficient non-hybrids you can buy. The new five-passenger Mirage hatchback, currently manufactured in Thailand for Mitsubishi's European and Asian markets, is due here this fall.

A quick walk-around confirms that the vehicle's diminutive appearance is no, uh, mirage. The little zipper is perched low to the ground on tiny 14-inch wheels that would seem right at home on a Smart ForTwo. The rounded and somewhat stubby front gives the car a cute-in-its-own-way appearance that belies its wind-cheating drag coefficient. Although the front doors and liftgate are generously sized, smallish rear doors and a sloping roofline hamper three-in-a-pinch rear-seat access.

The interior appointments are simple, yet tasteful, with easy-to-read gauges and controls that gibe with the Mirage's practical nature. The 60:40 split rear seat can be folded down for added stowage but even when occupied there's reasonable space for groceries and gear.

The base model actually comes with a decent list of features, such as tilt steering, keyless entry, power windows and outside mirrors, a 140-watt four-speaker audio system and an eco indicator that lights up when you're operating in a fuel-saving manner. The Mirage also has seven standard airbags, including a driver's knee inflatable.

Move up to the premium model and the content list is expected to include automatic climate and speed control, alloy wheels, steering-wheel-mounted audio switches, fog lamps and keyless entry and a start/stop button. The Mirage will never be confused for a junior-sized luxury car — leather seats, sunroof and other niceties aren't offered — but as a short-haul urban commuter it's the right car for the job.

2014 Mitsubishi Mirage

- Type. Four-door, front-wheel-drive sub-compact hatchback
- Engines (hp). 1.2-litre DOHC three-cylinder (74hp)
- Transmissions. Five-speed manual; continuously variable (CVT)
- Base price (incl. destination) $13,000 (est.)

Fuel Economy

Contemplating a vehicle this small usually involves compromises and in the Mirage's case you give up room in return for exemplary fuel economy. Mitsubishi is estimating 5.3 l/100 km in the city and 4.4 in the highway. That beats the Chevy Spark's 6.3/5.1 rating and even surpasses the Smart Fortwo's 5.8/4.7.

Design

The car is larger than the Chevrolet Spark, for example, in most key exterior measurements by five to 7.5 centimetres. However, it's more petite than other competitors, notably the Ford Fiesta, Honda Fit and Hyundai Accent hatches.

Car colour: there's protection in that paint

Driving force. Several different layers laid on and cured on the factory floor are all part of the long term battle against corrosion

drive@metronews.ca

You might think your vehicle's paint is all about it looking good, but it's just half the story.

That paint job actually involves a multi-stage process that's as much about protecting the metal from corrosion as it is about appearance.

The first step starts before the car is even built. "The steel comes in as a coil with a zinc layer that's applied at the mill," says Tim Weingartz, paint materials and strategy manager for Ford Motor Company.

"The zinc is the first layer for corrosion protection."

The steel is made into a vehicle body, which is then dipped into two different tanks, each containing more than 60,000 litres of corrosion-resistant coating materials.

The body is then baked at 180 degrees Celsius to cure the coatings. These, plus that first zinc coating, provide three initial layers of protection against rust.

The first paint step is primer. It protects the top anti-corrosion layer from sunlight, which can make it go chalky, and it provides a smooth base for the paint.

Since it's a relatively elastic coating, it also absorbs the energy when debris hits it, helping to prevent stone chips.

"After that, we put on the layer that everyone thinks of as the paint," Weingartz says.

"It's typically a base coat which contains the colour and pigment. Over top of that, we apply clear coat. It's a superior barrier and it gives the car that depth of appearance that adds to the esthetics of the vehicle."

Some colour coats contain tiny flakes of aluminum or mica. Known as "metallic" paints, these give the finish an extra glimmer. All of the primer, paint, and clear coat layers together are about as thick as a human hair.

Once the final clear coat layer is applied, the vehicle is baked again to cure the paint.

"We used to bake the primer separately, and then the base coat and clear coat," Weingartz says. "We now have one bake for all three layers, which lowers the CO2 footprint by anywhere from 15 to 25 per cent, and the energy saving is very significant. The lean process has elevated us environmentally, and it's a cost savings, too."

Cleaner process

"We now have one bake for all three layers, which lowers the carbon footprint by anywhere from 15 to 25 per cent and the energy saving is very significant."

Tim Weingartz, paint materials and strategy manager for Ford Motor Company
On how the latest painting technology is easier on the environment

Take note

- Extra $. Some car colours are extra-charge because some pigments, notably red, are costlier to manufacture. Metal flake can also drive up the paint's price.
- Energy sapping. Painting requires a lot of power, and can account for more than half of an auto plant's energy consumption.
- Creative. Auto colour designers work with many influences, including fashion design, to develop new paint shades for vehicles

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
You may prefer to hide than to deal with people who annoy you today. But that would be a shame because the planets indicate you have much to share, and much to gain from expressing your point of view.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
Someone you live or work with will test your willingness to stand up for what you believe over the next 24 hours. They don't know you as well as they should. A Taurus never gives in!

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
You may be big and tough enough to face a worrying situation alone by there is no reason why you should. Call on friends and colleagues to back you up today.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
A loved one is eager to kiss and make up and, deep down, so are you. Get over your hurt feelings and get back together. And remember: Everyone falls out occasionally.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
According to the planets, affairs of the heart need extra attention today, as do friendships that seem to be drifting apart. The upcoming new moon can heal any rift. But first that has to be your desire.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Most people respond well to reason but one person is behaving so badly that you may have no choice but to lay down the law. No one plays hardball better than a Virgo.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
If someone offers you advice today, you would be wise to listen and, if possible, take action. The last thing they want is to see you make a silly and costly mistake — and you don't want to see it either.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
An opportunity to improve your status at work looks tempting but the planets warn it will mean a lot of extra responsibility and you already have too much on your plate.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Your plans for the day should be based on what interests you, not on what other people expect of you. If you let them tell you what to do once, they will do it again and again.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
You may be doing well but you are also worried that the more you gain, the more likely it is someone will come along and take it away from you. That's far too negative an attitude — and far too materialistic.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Routine tasks will come easy to you today and you will feel immensely pleased with yourself when it's all done. You will also be entitled to take it easy this evening, maybe in the company of a special friend.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
If you have something to say, you must speak up. According to your solar chart, a frank exchange of views is not just an option but a must. Without it, confusion and bad feelings will continue. SALLY BROMPTON
